CANADA AND THE J. D. C. CAMPAIGN

The Joint Distribution Committee which raised $60,000,000 for the relief of suffering European Jewry after the world war, under the leadership of David Brown, is planning a campaign to raise $15,000,000 to facilitate Jewish colonization in the Crimea. The Soviet Government has allocated certain fertile territories for the purpose, and competent investigators have declared that the acceptance of Russia's offer may prove the solution to the post-bellum difficulties of many Jews. The Soviet regime had deprived thousands of Jewish merchants of their livelihoods, when it inaugurated its initial economic policies. These merchants will now have the chance of settling on the soil, and becoming farmers, and thus reclaiming their ruined fortunes. The project seems to be a worthy one, and a conference of Jewish leaders will meet in Philadelphia next week to authorize the drive.

To that conference we should like to send this message. Canada's gates are wide open to immigrant farmers. Canada has some of the richest agricultural lands in the world, lying idle and literally begging for human labour to cultivate them. Not only are these farm lands available, but financial aid and other inducements are made to prospective land settlers. Canada besides is a land whose star is now in the ascendant. Canada seems to be destined for great economic advances. Why not have the Joint Distribution Committee set aside some of its funds for Jewish colonization on Canadian farm lands? After all, the status of the Soviet Government is still somewhat uncertain. The traditions of pogroms still linger in the minds of the Russian peasants. Canada is a country with Anglo-Saxon traditions, where, though there is some intolerance, the Jew has never been physically molested. Why not bring Jewish farmers here, and let them till the soil, that the Jew may again contribute to the development of a great country on the North American continent. Mr. Brown, "come to Canada and inspect her fertile fields, and then recommend to the Joint Distribution Committee that a good share of its funds be utilized for Canadian agricultural colonization."

THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA

The anti-Semites who fulminate about Jewish unity had the wind taken out of their sails when the cables between Vienna and our continent buzzed with reports of dissensions and disagreements which almost wrecked the Congress of Vienna. If there is unity in Jewish or in Zionist ranks, it certainly was not evident at the recent Zionist council. Every shade of world thought was represented among the delegates. Free-thinkers and religious fanatics, capitalists and socialists, radicals and reactionaries, dreamers and statesmen were to be found in the personnel of the Congress at Vienna. In fact no better argument against Jewish intellectual clannishness can be found than in the composite gathering of Zionist delegates, for every ism that now disturbs the intellectual words had its protagonists and champions. There was the Mizrachi group, who represented the orthodox religionists. There were the Poalei Zion, who are the socialists. There were also middle class, who advocate a bourgeois philosphy, and hence the clashes and difficulties of Zionist leadership.

The opposition at Zionist congresses has always been strong and active, and he who aspires to Zionist world leadership must be thick-skinned and able to bear adverse criticism. The burdens of Jewish leadership are almost proverbial. Moses in biblical times found his task too arduous, and had to call in the elders to assist him, and even thereafter was frequently discouraged by the fierceness of his unruly followers. Herzl was brought to an early grave by the trials of Zionist leadership, and Weizman to-day is having his share of troubles. The Zionist helm requires more than the iron hand. The Jewish masses are too alert intellectually, and cannot be silenced by hokum, to make leadership among them easy. They know what they want, and neither oratory nor fame can overawe them. Therefore unity is difficult. Hence Weizman was at first denied his full vote of confidence. Weizman is a statesman with character and vision. He combines the practical with the ideal. Though his soul soars to the stars, his feet are planted firmly on solid ground. He is aware of the fact that the Zionist position is not perfect. He knows better than any man the obvious weaknesses of the Palestinian mandate. The Arab problem too must give him concern. The reconstruction work and immigration is not proceeding as rapidly as Weizman the dreamer would wish it. But Weizman does not blind himself to facts. The difficulties are there. Over many he has no control. His goal is to accomplish the greatest amount of work under the existing conditions. He accepts the conditions, which he did not make and which he cannot alter. He limits his ideal that it may find expression.

But the opposition are dreamers and hotheads. Some are of the variety of "luftmenschen" who abound in such profusion in Jewish circles. They are unaware of facts, of practicalities, and see only the beautiful, beckoning ideal. They would brook no compromise. A half of a loaf will not satisfy them. They insist that their dream be immediately realized. They refuse to recognize facts. And then the hotheads and impetuous ones, the youth, virile and aggressive, impatient of delay, anxious to establish the millenium overnight, so intent in their objective that they fail to see the obstacles in the way, ready to ride full tilt against Gibraltar. Such was Weizman's opposition—the opposition of theorists and dreamers, extremists all—while he, the statesman, builds carefully and quietly, never losing the vision, but approaching it with patience and with due cognizance of the inevitable limitations.

But though there was dissension, the reports of the various departments revealed the progress that is being made in Palestine. New land is being acquired. Deserts are beginning to bloom. Ghetto Jews are becoming farmers. No more cringing before the Gentile, no more apology for existence, no more social and intellectual ostracism, no more impediments against living a Jewish life in Palestine. Here the Jew belongs. There he ispart of its soil, as well as of its soul. There the scars of generations of oppression are being healed. There the Jew is not a tolerated guest. There a new generation is arising, which knows not the pharaohs of the Diaspora.

The Jewish agency too has been authorized and will link Zionists and non-Zionists together in the important work of Palestinian reconstruction. Now no Jew will be able to stand idly by and deny his support to the reconstruction of the Holy Land. The non-Zionist will have a say about the distribution

New York! Twisting, cavernous streets, cold stone buildings, glaring lights. Downtown New York, East Broadway, Hester Street and Allen Street. How are these linked with cruelty and fear and Russian autocracy?

The Levines were poor. But poverty was a golden dream compared to the horror they had left, struggle a blessed relief, hardship something not even noticed. They were happy with their two rooms and their scant pushcart business. The rooms were in the back, seemingly a main of the tenement building yet squeezed in a space left vacant by the parting of a narrow hallway and a yawning floor.

At first the pushcart business did not thrive. No one seemed to want the shining pots and pans that Father Levine so temptingly displayed. But they had hope, youth. They kept on. Little by little the money came. It grew. Finally there was enough for a tiny shop in the basement, recently vacated by a tailor. The space was divided off. On one side there were thick plates, china and glass, big old-fashioned mustache cups, pots and pans, remnants of the old business, brass candlesticks, sugar bowls. On the other side was a miniature grocery business—tea, coffee, spices, crackers, sugar, salt, striped stick candy, chocolate, green apples, loaves of black bread.

One could not at first distinguish which side the cups and saucers were, and on which the groceries belonged. It all looked like a jumbled mass. In the daytime a pale gas jet flickered overhead. In the evening two were lit, one turned as high as it would go. Paper bags, garlic in long curly strings; a ball of cord for wrapping purposes hung from the ceiling. The windows were dusty, rain-streaked. They looked out on a muddy street which the sun seemed never able to dry in winter, nor the rain to wet in summer. Rumbling carts and trucks went by with ear-deafening clatter, horse cars jangled. Sometimes a lonely organ-grinder made dismal, wailing musical noises outside the door. It was before the day of the crashing elevated, before the great bridges spanned the shining water from land to land.

All during the day Mother Levine sold the tea and coffee and bread.

"That bread?" pointing to a huge black loaf. "Five cents."

The customer searched in a black, greasy leather purse, deposited five pennies on the wooden counter and snapped the purse together with a clock.

"And how," pursued Mother Levine, "is your new grandchild?"

"Fine! Fine!" mumbled the other, and shuffled from the place.

That was the way with Mother Levine. She sold them their tea and coffee and sugar, but she understood their struggles. Everyone knew her and, knowing her, they grew to love her. Sometimes they came in, sat on the high stools, chattered by the hour. Mother Levine liked their company. I was often lonely, especially in bad weather, when no one seemed to want anything. The damp of the street mingled with the pungent odour of coffee and garlic and spices. The one blackened window in the back of the shop was never opened. Father Levine disliked air; he was suspicious of drafts. He never removed his soiled black derby hat which was always perched on the back of his head.

Every day in the little shop was the same. Sometimes the news would come of a ship that was sailing from the land of horrors, and on the ship were relatives, friends, who had to be given temporary homes. It was always Mother Levine who sheltered them, wanted them. Her brain was seared with things that even time could not erase.

Boxes and barrels were shifted, changed around, placed in front of the already crowded shop, or added to the litter in the cluttered back yard. Chairs did duty as beds. The latter were given twice as much respect as usual.

Dusting shelves, plumping pillows, rubbing and rubbing in the rusty tin cavities that were supposedly sinks.

"How long will they be here?" from Father Levine.

"What does it matter?"

"Well—"

"Jacob," turning around and drying her raw, wet hands on a soiled apron, "did you forget so soon? When I have anything to give, I will give it. When have nothing—" Jacob understood. He departed meekly from the kitchen and retraced his steps to the front of the shop.

Later, people, stolid, square, high-cheeked, taut skin drawn over the lines of their faces. Patient faces, patient souls. Patient. They did not know the next step, yet they were trustful, hopeful. In the meantime, Mother Levine, the damp smell of the shop, the pale light, the flickering shadows.

"And you will please to sleep here," pointing out a cot bed, a gray blanket, prickly yet warm. "And this," motioning to a long wooden box covered with the same sort of protection, "it will feel good after the ship." And so on until all available space was used.

"Where will you sleep?"

"Who? Me?" laughing softly. "Don't think about me. I have a place. I only want you should have it good." No more questioning. They were too weary for talk, too softly weary.

It was enough that these people were away from sudden death on the plains in the black night, from sudden shrieks, pain, guns, silence—apprehensive silence. It was the worst of all the terrors. Oh-h-uncertainty. Now they were free.

Mother Levine shut the street door softly, then pulled a shade halfway. Whispering night noises of a sleeping city drifted in. A yellow light glowed through the drip-drip-drip of a misty rain. She looked around caressingly. Huddled, peaceful forms, heavy breathing. The gas halted, quivered, sputtered—blackness.

Early dawn. Grayness. Cold drizzle. Bells. Toot-toot, the harbour was waking. Milk wagons with their quick clop-clop-clop sounding a metallic note. Feet stirring on the sidewalk. The street lamps were dead. Shouts. A policeman's whistle. Voices. Day was here.

The little black back kitchen was alive with steam. Odours, cinnamon, coffee, cabbage. The oil-cloth covered table with the shine worn off was piled high with sticky, cracked dishes. Heart-breaking, back-breaking dishes. Nasty piles. Ugh! Cold water, hard water, biting with soda. Split fingers. Grease—more grease. Slimy dish rags. Crumbs on the black newspaper-spread floor. So it went, day in, day out—years. How they flew!

Father Levine ambled on, plodding patiently to help Mother Levine, soothing, scolding the fast-growing family, trying to fill the clamoring little, greedy, sticky little hands. No rest for Mother Levine. It was more than ever a question of waking with the click-click of the milk wagons, softly, so as not to disturb a sleeping household. Cold milk bottles. The iciness of the little kitchen hole. A hollow echo as the bottles were plumped on the table. Then climbing back to a

DUFFERIN SCHOOL GRADUATES' SOCIETY

In the assembly hall of the Baron de Hirsch Institute, September 6, the Dufferin School Graduates' Society held third convocation, at which were presented eighteen scholarships to Jewish graduates of the public school.

The hall and platform were decorated with Union Jacks and Zionist flags and colours. Louis Glazer, the new president, spoke.

M. A. Fink, the retiring president, introduced the speaker, Rabbi Julius Berger. The rabbi told about the new synagogue to be built at Cornwall, Ont., and how the funds were raised for this undertaking. Cornwall has a population of some twenty-five Jewish families. A $500 Canadian Victory Bond was being raffled, the speaker said, tickets for which were sold, the proceeds to go towards the new synagogue. The rabbi called upon Sol Z. Fels to make an announcement with regard to the bond to be raffled. Mr. Fels called upon little Hilda Golt, of Montreal, to draw a ticket. Miss Golt drew a ticket and the bond was won by J. Kuranoff, of 33 Prospect Avenue, Westmount.

The musical numbers of the evening were given by a choir of girls of the Folk Shool, under the leadership of their principal, Mr. Wiseman, and their instructor, Mr. Rabinovitch, who sang several Jewish songs. Louis Herman and Melvin Borsuk, under the leadership of Professor Jacob Rosmarin, sang several melodies in a most appreciative and eloquent manner.

Professor Rosmarin has volunteered to give to the most talented scholar receiving the Society's scholarship, free tuition in singing and music, and for the remaining children greatly reduced prices.

Charles Hershon was the first to receive award for 1926-1927 his scholarship, and also promised to act as a big brother for the recipient of his scholarship, and to provide him with all the necessary books throughout the year.

Sol Z. Fels, another donor, spoke, as did Abraham Raginsky, who has awarded a scholarship in memory of his late wife, Rena Raginsky. Joseph Parnass has been donor for the past three years.

Votes of thanks to the donors, to the children, to the gathered assembly, to the Boy Scouts, and to the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies for the use of their hall for the Society's meetings, were voiced by A. J. Livinson, founder of the Society, and responded to by Alderman Julius Miller, of Cornwall, Ont., who came for convocation. Miss Mae Glazer was pianist.

Those who are non-members and wish to become members of the Society, communicate with the Secretary, Miss Sarah Miller, 1874 Esplanade Avenue, Belair 4034-W.

The donors for 1925-1926 are: Peter Bercovitch, K.C., Bramson's Auto Service, Limited, Bronfman Interests, and B. Aaron, Harry Cohen, Sir Mortimer B. Davis (4), Philip Fainer, Sol. Fels, Sol Kellert, Alderman Julius Levine, Joseph Parnass, Charles Hershon, H. Simon & Sons, Limited, Abraham Raginsky, Mark Workman, and the Society's Scholarship, in the name of its secretary, Miss Sarah Miller.

The Semetic Department of McGill University

A Few Facts About Its Growth by Rabbi Julius Berger

The Sons of Israel, a well-known local organization, has undertaken a most commendable task which ought to receive the support of every thinking Jewish resident of this city. Like real Sons of Israel, the Board of Executive of that organization, with the opening of the Hebrew University in Palestine began to feel the urgent necessity of doing much more than has been done in the past to foster the study of our own literature and culture.

Right here, in our own City of Montreal, we have the best possible agency in the Semitic Department of McGill University where an elaborate system of courses on Hebrew language, history and civilization is being given. It is high time that the Jewish intelligentsia, particularly they to whom McGill is the alma mater, should show a livelier interest at least in that department which deals with the history and culture of our people. Perhaps a few notes on the development of that department will be timely at this moment when an organization like the Sons of Israel is attempting to show the way.

It is interesting to know that seventy-two years ago, in 1853, Rabbi A. de Sola was appointed Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Languages at McGill University. He held the office for twenty-nine years till his death. The principal languages taught were Hebrew and Aramaic. In 1882 Dr. Daniel Coussirat was appointed lecturer in Hebrew and Oriental languages. Five years later, he was made Professor of Semitic languages and Oriental literature. Hebrew was then taught in all the undergraduate years. Special empahsis was placed on linguistics and literary spirit. Dr. Coussirat held the office for twenty-five years till his death in 1907.

In 1907, Professor Brodie Brockwell was invited to come to McGill and reorganize the department. A definite distinction was now made between the ordinary and the honour courses. Students were permitted to take the B.A. exclusively in the Semitic honour course. As soon as the Graduate School was formed, they were also permitted to take the M.A. and Ph.D. exclusively in the Semitic languages.

Professor Brockwell broadened the department considerably and attached great importance to Arabic which had not previously been taught. He also emphasized the importance of Semitic archaeology and epigraphy as well as of Semitic social anthropology.

The new system made it necessary to appoint several assistants. Some of the professors of the Theological College generously gave their assistance gratis and still do so. At the present time first class scholars like A. R. Gordon, of the Presbyterian College, Abbot-Smith of the Anglican College and W. C. Graham of the Wesleyan College are assisting the department.

In earlier years, several very distinguished scholars have given their services—Walter M. Patton, most distinguished of Canada's Arabists; J. C. Craig, Canada's most distinguished Assyriologist. For a number of years, invaluable services were also rendered by Rabbi Nathan Gordon.

Sir William MacDonald, who was largely responsible for Professor Brodie Brockwell's coming to McGill, had the vision to foresee that one in charge of such a department must be one who can look beyond the narrow limitations of any special church or creed. Believing that Professor Brockwell would administer faithfully to the purely academic needs of members of all creeds and races, he was brought to McGill University. The policy he started and has followed ever since was outlined in the McGill Calendar of 1907, in which, describing the reconstructed courses, he wrote:

"The courses are constructed with a view to providing students with a thorough knowledge of a limited portion of the Semitic field and a general acquaintance with the entire range of the same, including some of the leading contributions of the Semitic world to western thought and culture, with a view, too, to enabling students who have taken high honours to pursue unaided, in much fuller detail, a number of the more interesting and important questions arising out of Semitic literature and civilization."

During the past eighteen years the department has grown to such an extent that it is being seriously considered by Professor Brockwell to establish a chair in Rabbinics—that is a lectureship, first, in Mishnaic, Talmudic and Midrashic Law; secondly, in Jewish Ceremonial Institutions and Customs. For this purpose the sum of fifty thousand dollars is necessary.

The Sons of Israel are conscious of the fact that it is almost impossible to raise the entire sum at once. The organization, therefore, undertook to do it gradually. And they want to begin to get some practical result immediately. Their proposal, then, is to endeavour to gather six thousand dollars through individual subscriptions by the end of this month. Of this sum, four thousand dollars would be used as a sinking fund as the first instalment of the permanent fifty thousand dollars. Two thousand dollars will be used to secure the assistance of a lecturer in Rabbinic literature in the department. McGill does not feel inclined to accept services gratis as has been done in some cases heretofore, and yet, its financial resources are such at the present time that they do not allow any further disbursements.

The Order of the Sons of Israel has shown the way. It should not be difficult to raise six thousand dollars for so worthy a cause. The appeal made by that organization will without doubt be responded to by our co-religionists knowing that such a chair at McGill will not only expand the curriculum of Jewish learning, but it will also enhance the status of the Jewish student at the University.

Contributions may be sent to Max Horwitz, treasurer of McGill Scholarship Fund, 282 St. Catherine Street West. A formal acknowledgment from the department will be forwarded to donors in due course.

IN THE SYNAGOGUE

Rabbi Samuel New Head of Temple Emanu-El

Rabbi Herbert J. Samuel, who succeeds Rabbi Max J. Merritt as head of Temple Emanu-El, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, October 13, 1882, and educated at Jews College, London, University College, London. He was rabbi of Swansea Hebrew Congregation, South Wales, from December, 1906, to March, 1914. Since March, 1914, he has been rabbi of Shaarey Zedek Congregation, Winnipeg, Man. Rabbi Samuel's great-grandfather, Moses Samuel (born London, 1785) was a leading spirit in the Liverpool community. He introduced the preaching of English sermons in Jewish congregations in England. He edited the Anglo-Jewish periodical, "The Cup of Salvation," and translated the works of Moses Mendelsohn into English. He was the elder brother of Louis Samuel, grandfather of Sir Herbert Samuel. The Samuels are descended from Saul Wahl, who was said, according to the legend, to have reigned as king of Poland for one night.

Rabbi Samuel's grandfather, the Rev. Julius Sandheim, born London, 1812, was rabbi of the Dublin Hebrew Congregation and was a nephew of the famous Rabbi Akiba Eger, of Pressburg. He married the daughter of the Rev. Isaac Davidson, his predecessor in the rabbinate at Dublin. Rabbi Samuel represents the seventh generation of English-born Jews. He married in 1909 Ida Neft, formerly of Kovno, Russia. They have two daughters, aged 15 and 11.

Rabbi Samuel has been active in public life in Winnipeg. In 1924 he was elected chaplain of the Canadian Club. He is at present the literary secretary of the Club. He is a Gilwell Scout and chaplain to the Jewish troops and packs and Girl Guides in Winnipeg. He is a member of the Committee of the General Ministerial Association of Winnipeg, of the Provincial Executive, of the Boy Scout Association for Manitoba, of the National Council of Education, and many citizen committees.

The "Manitoba Free Press" writes editorial of "A Regretable Departure" as follows:

"Few citizens have taken a more active part in the life of the community than Rev. Herbert J. Samuel, of the Shaarey Zedek Congregation, who is about to leave Winnipeg to take charge of a large and influential congregation in Montreal. Since his arrival in Winnipeg, more than ten years ago, Rabbi Samuel has taught and exemplified good citizenship. He was keenly interested in the welfare and progress of his own people, but his concern for the development of the community, especially its idealism, knew no bounds. Broad-minded, tolerant, he has been a first-class citizen and his departure from Winnipeg will be the cause of genuine regret. His contribution to Winnipeg's life during the war period will be grate-remembered by those with whom he was associated."

Temple Emanu-El, Rabbi Herbert J. Samuel, 4128 Sherbrooke Street West.

At Temple Emanu-El, 4128 Sherbrooke Street West, a special farewell service was held, under the auspices of the congregational board, in honour of Rabbi Merritt, who has been called to serve in one of the outstanding American pulpits, at Portland, Oregon. He gave a farewell sermon. Rabbi Merritt was presented with a purse by the members of his congregation. He was the guest of honour at banquests given by the Masons, the Rotarians and the Kiwanians of Montreal. Mrs. Merritt and two sons will join Rabbi Merritt shortly. A luncheon was held on September 1 at the Mount Royal Hotel by the ladies of the board of the Temple Emanu-El Sisterhood, honouring Mrs. Merritt. Mrs. Merritt replied with a short speech, when Mrs. Gus Fischel presented her with a gift on behalf of the Sisterhood. A bazaar meeting followed the luncheon. Among those present were Mesdames J. N. Neumann, J. Kruger, J. Lewinson, D. Cohen, J. P. Levee, Max Jacobs, I. M. Rubinovitch, Frank Solomon, L. "Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancour
That for what it cost me to be free
I might have had an anchor."

Recently resumés of several chapters in James Waterman Wise's book, "Liberalizing Liberal Judaism," were given in this column. They were productive of comment in the daily newspapers, inquiries about the book and where it could be purchased, and also letters from subscribers. Following is one of the letters:

"This is from one who has taken your paper since it was first established under the impression that I was helping somewhat the existence of a Jewish paper. Your articles, however, especially those that were issued about Wise's book, convinced me that your paper should find no place in a real Jewish home. To think that a so-called Jewish paper would demonstrate the virtues of one in whose behalf rivers of Jewish blood have been spilled innocently, and to this day. I will not degrade myself by mentioning his name. We often have mission sheets thrown into our door no more objectionable. The idea of a Jewish paper almost agreeing to mixed marriages and even mentioning the name of him who has been the cause of all the sufferings of Judaism. As one who is anxious to raise his children in a real Jewish atmosphere, I consider that the Review is not a proper paper for my children to read. Consequently I desire to have your paper discontinued just as soon as the term expires, and will offer no objections if you find it convenient to discontinue it forthwith."

The letter-writer is referring to Wise's ideas on the teachings of Jesus, and their place in Liberal Judaism, and also to his ideas on inter-marriage. Wise says that the teachings of Jesus, the man, should be taught by Liberal Judaism along with the teachings of its other prophets. As to intermarriage, he says it should neither be urged nor condemned. In this column there was no attempt at comment on the resumés on the subject. Wise's ideas were presented for their freshness, their stimulating quality and intrinsic interest.

If the letter-writer believes that the teachings of Jesus are responsible for the rivers of blood he speaks of, he needs to understand that the teachings of Jesus should be separated from the theology and institutions of Christianity. Wise does not advise Jews to become followers of Jesus, but to make use of Jesus' teachings and any other which might be helpful to the individual Jew. As to agreeing to intermarriage, this column neither condemns nor advocates intermarriage.

Space is given this letter because its writer is evidently troubled and sincere, although a bigot. Had he been a crank, his letter would have been ignored, or printed in the mail-box at best, because it is of interest. But, sad to say, this man is no crank. He is merely a prejudiced, superstitious Jew, and the worst of it is that he is not alone by several millions. You can see that he is a sober person, really watchful of his family and anxious for their good. Just the same, he lives in darkness and will continue to live in darkness so long as he believes that for him to mention the name of Jesus is a degradation. Always asking toleration, he is intolerant. He needs education and exposure to ideas. Instead, he wants to lock his children up away from them. It is unfortunate, from his viewpoint, that he can not wrap them up in cotton wool forever, except for treatment to ideas which he himself has selected for them.

As to having the REVIEW discontinued, whenever its writing do not mirror the opinions of some readers, "The Nation," in a similar situation, expressed the sentiments of this paper when it said: "'The Nation' is always losing subscribers who do not like one or another of its ideas and ideals, but it does not modify its opinions according to the circulation manager's mail. To angry cancelations it pays small heed, for the person who resentfully cancels a subscription because he differs with a magazine's views thereby stamps himself as illiberal from the start."

Card of Thanks

All notices under this head twenty-five cents per count line

Mrs. S. Perlman, Hilton Avenue, wishes to thank her relatives and friends for their kindness shown towards her during her illness in the hospital.

OBITUARY

The death occurred on Wednesday, September 3, at the Western Hospital, of Mrs. Tassi Balick, in her sixty-fifth year. The funeral was held on Thursday from her late residence, 174 Grenadier Road, to the McCaul Street Cemetery. Surviving are her husband, six daughters, Mrs. Fannie Weinblatt and Mrs. Minnie Gogel, of New York; Mrs. Esther Keller, Mrs. Annie Stein, Mrs. Celia Berg and Mrs. Lillie Waxman; and one son, Hyman Balick, all of Toronto.

BORN

To Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Waxman (nee Lillie Balick), 614 Dufferin Street, at the Toronto General Hospital, on Friday, September 4, a daughter, Tassi.

To Mr. and Mrs. Sam Harris (nee Bella Rasmiasky), College Street, at the Western Alexandra Hospital, on Monday, August 31, a daughter.

THE BROWN BETTY TEA ROOMS

Close to one of Toronto's busiest corners, and within easy reach of many of the larger office buildings, the Brown Betty Tea Rooms offer refreshment to the business people of the City and their friends, in an atmosphere distinctly unusual and interesting.

Just up the stairs at 42 King Street East, but a world removed from the hurry and bustle of the street, these comfortable rooms furnish an attractive refuge for a quiet lunch or for the reviving cup of afternoon tea.

The first tea rooms to be established in the City, their constant and growing popularity testify to the marked ability of the hostess, Miss Barwick, whose pride in her work is well founded, as a visit will prove to the most critical.

Whether we are conscious of it or not, it seems that we, most of us, possess the artistic sense which can here be gratified. Pleasant surroundings undoubtedly tend to promote that good digestion which should "wait on appetite."

Upstairs there is a "General" Room, and a room where mere man holds full sway, with more easy chairs and gas fires to minister to his comfort; and still another, the "Yellow Room" so that everyone may suit his passing whim.

Visitors gravitate naturally toward the little tables set with Brown Betty ware, flower-decorated and tended by waitresses who move swiftly to and from the serving pantries and the kitchen where lies concealed the machinery of Brown Betty popularity.

The Brown Betty fills a large place in downtown life, and has the good wishes of a host of friends.

Kaplan & Sprachman, architects, are adding an additional floor to warehouse building, 44, 46 and 48 York Street for Miller's Mens' Wear, Limited.

of Keren Hayesod funds, and those who do not share the Zionist dream will yet be able to aid the Jewish farm movement in Palestine, as they are ready to aid the one in the Crimea. What a pity that Herzl is not alive to see the attainment of the goal he envisioned, all Jewry united in the reconstruction of Palestine! History will quickly forget the revolts against Weizmann, but the authorizations of the Jewish agency, if formed, will be an important milestone in the story of the Jew, and will stand out as the achievement of the Congress of Vienna.

COMEDY

Charles Hampden's British Players presented "Applejohn's Adventure" at the re-opening of the Comedy Theatre, September 7. G. P. Huntley, the famous English comedian, showed his great versatility in the role of Applejohn. Seeking adventure, Applejohn found it at home. A band of crooks frustrated by Applejohn and a real estate agent who can sell anything added to the hilarity.

There was a big Monday audience, and their delight was so evident that even bigger audiences are expected for the rest of the week.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Playing to the largest crowds of white theatre-goers ever known in the history of Columbia Burlesque, and a generous turnout of people of their own race, the new, all-coloured musical piece, "Lucky Sambo," will make its local debut Monday matinee, September 14, at the Empire Theatre. Here is prime entertainment for everyone. Sponsored by Hurtig & Seaman, who once handled Williams and Walker, and the late Ernest Hogan, this fine company of sixty black-and-tan artists has attracted S.R.O. business at its every engagement.

PALESTINE OR CRIMEA?

Dr. Wise's Notable Address Delivered Before Zionist Congress at Vienna

(An impressive address delivered before the Fourteenth Zionist Congress in Vienna on Thursday, August 27, was that of Dr. Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, head of the Jewish Institute of Religion, and a leading member of the American Zionist Delegation to the Congress. Dr. Wise's special reference to Crimean colonization plan is of especial timeliness, in view of the forthcoming conference in Philadelphia. A complete transcript from the address, as taken from the minutes of the Congress, is given below).

Dr. Wise took the chair and excused himself for holding his speech in English. Dr. Wise then described the three main phases of the development of the Zionist movement in America. The first phase was the time of Zionist pioneering and of small beginnings, when only a small band of enthusiastic Zionists held the flag of the movement high in America. This phase dated from the beginning of the Zionist Organization of America in 1908, till the beginning of the war. The second phase was like a fairy tale. He then went on as follows:

"We were ready and prepared in America to work for Zionism in 1914. We were ready, both from the point of view of Jewish life and of American social relations. If ever there was a lucky constellation it was then. The President of the United States was a man full of the warmest sympathy for the Zionist cause. Equally fortunately we had Zionist leaders who were able to take rich advantage of Wilson's sympathy for the Zionist cause. After the end of the war came the third phase, and shortly thereafter there took place a change in the leadership of the Zionist Organization of America. I personally was not active in the administration of the Zionist Organization of America during the last four years, but I can publicly testify that the administration of the American Zionists since 1921 displayed extraordinary strength, ability and energy, combined with a blameless attitude. This administration enjoyed the support of the great leaders of the world organization, Dr. Weizman, Sokolow, Levine, Motzkin, etc., who occasionally came to America to strengthen our work. I believe that it would be beneath my dignity as a Zionist and as a man if I did not mention the fact that during the war it was the good fortune of Zionism to have as the leader of the American organization a man of great spirit, of statesmanlike wisdom, of scholarship and devotion—Justice Louis Brandeis, who, together with Mack, Straus, Frankfurter, Flexnor and others, held the reins which they surrendered four years later.

"In the last few days a number of questions have been put to me which I should like to answer here. I was asked what I, as an American Jew, thought of the demonstrations in Vienna and the threatened excesses. My answer as American and as Jew is: if some day a non-Jewish Congress will be held in Jerusalem it will not be necessary to patrol the streets.

"In the second place I come to another question: When in 1914 I undertook my first trip to Palestine, the Turkish Government demanded that I accept a red ticket which entitled me to remain sixty days in Palestine. I refused to accept this ticket. To-day, thanks to the League of Nations and the Mandatory Power, I can journey to Palestine freely. You are unable to go freely to America. This is evidence for the statesmanlike wisdom of a Weizman, a Herzl, a Nordau, who years ago prophesied that a time would come when every door would be closed to Jews. Therefore one door should be held open. The prophesies have been realized. All doors are closed. Only one is open, the Jewish door to Jewish Palestine. This is my answer to the question in regard to the immigration restrictions of America.

"Before I take the chair, I wish to say a word in regard to a very important problem which will probably receive the attention of the Congress. I believe such to be my duty as an American Jew. In any case I speak for myself and not as the representative of the American Zionists. A few months ago a resolution was taken in America to again take up the work conducted by the J.D.C. As far as I know there was little or no consultation with the Jewish communities and the Jewish leaders of Europe before this resolution was taken. During the war years 1915, 1916 and 1917 it was impossible to hold congresses, conferences and sessions in order to discover the opinion of European Jews. War days required war measures. We had to act according to our lights, but even then there were more thorough consultations with European Jewish leaders than took place in the present instance. Now there is no war. Now we can call together the Jewish leaders and groups, and ask them to consider the great plan for a wholesale colonization in Russia, in the Crimea. Did this happen? It is my right and duty to ask in your name: were the European communities consulted? Just as the Jewish Agency concerns itself with the general consultation in regard to questions which relate to Palestine, so should American Jews have both the power and the desire to come to an agreement with the Jews of eastern and middle Europe before a programme which involves millions is determined upon, a programme which deals with an unproven and insecure plan—the Crimea project. I personally am opposed to every plan of colonization in the Crimea as a substitute for colonization in Palestine. I object to the Crimea plan as an alternative to colonisation in Palestine.

"As an American Jew I am prepared to consider the project if it is not offered as a substitute for colonization in Palestine, but for colonization in Mexico or in South America. There must not be any competition between Palestinian and Crimean colonization. I have been informed that there is no intention to put Crimean colonization in the place of work for Palestine, but actually for some time past, Crimean colonization has been given priority over colonization in Palestine. This has been done with-

MARRIAGES

Snider—Gebirtig

McCaul Street Synagogue, decorated with autumn flowers, was the scene of the wedding of Edith Yetta Gebirtig, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Manuel Gebirtig, of Lee Avenue, and Norman M. Snider, second son of Mr. and Mrs. I. Snider, of Detroit, Michigan. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was gowned in a French creation of white chiffon heavily beaded with pearls and rhinestones. Her long court train was of similar material and trim while her bridal veil was a coronet of silver cloth trimmed with pearls and rhinestones. Silver shoes and stockings completed the bride's costume and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses, lilies-of-the-valley and orchids. Mrs. J. Weinraub was matron of honour in a smart frock of blue beaded chiffon. She carried Sweetheart roses. The bridesmaids were Misses Fanny White and Naomi Eis, of New York City. The former was gowned in yellow satin trimmed with beaver. She wore silver shoes and stockings and carried a shower bouquet of tea roses. Miss Eis wore Nile green chiffon trimmed with silver, with silver shoes and stockings and a bouquet of Sweetheart roses. The groom was supported by Arthur Lipsitt, of Detroit, while Sol Gebirtig, Joseph Weinraub and R. and J. Snider were ushers. A reception and dance were held at the King Edward Hotel. Mrs. Gebirtig, who received, wore a French gown of orchid chiffon trimmed with silver and rhinestones, while Mrs. Snider, mother of the groom, was in black chiffon velvet. Each wore corsage bouquets of roses. Mr. and Mrs. Snider left on a honeymoon trip by motor for New York and Atlantic City. They travelled in a new motor car, the groom's gift to his bride. The bride's travelling costume was a blonde ensemble suit with hat and shoes to match. She carried a summer ermine jacquette trimmed with fox. Mr. and Mrs. Snider will make their new home in Detroit.

ABBOTT'S STRAND THEATRE

"Red Hot" is the promising title of the offering of Mutual burlesque which Frank Harcourt is bringing to Abbott's Strand Theatre, Yonge, near King Street, for the week commencing September 14. The show opens with a matinee on Monday and will continue twice daily for the balance of the week. Frank Harcourt is probably the most popular eccentric character comedian in burlesque, and he is supported by a notable company. The cast of principals includes Miss Libbie Hart, a statuesque and beautiful prima donna; Mabel La Monaier, a charming ingenue; "Pep" Bedford, a fascinating singing and dancing soubrette; Nat Alberts, a clever character comedian, and Ed. Griffin and Jack Staib, who are both excellent actors. Mr. Harcourt is also said to have assembled a really fast-moving chorus of pretty young girls who have the ability to give full value to the many musical numbers.

SHEA'S

Rae Samuels heads the bill at Shea's Theatre this week. Personality, individuality, peculiarity and popularity are the keystones upon which Miss Rae Samuels has built her vaudeville reputation and from these four keystones she has created a structure which she calls "The Blue Streak of Vaudeville." A blue streak is supposed to and probably has the speed of lightning and this is why Miss Samuels has selected to call her artistic edifice a blue streak. She goes from mood to mood, humor to humor, from pathos to comedy, from comedy burlesque and back again with just this amount of speed. Her medium of expression is kaleidoscopic. Miss Samuels is a happy addition to any bill or any attraction and if ragtime has any gratitude it should be most liberal in bestowing it upon this fair exponent because she has done much in prolonging its life.

Grette Ardine has stepped from another rung, in fact several rungs, on that old ladder of accomplishment. She has formed an association with John Tyrell and Dave Kaye in a dancing story called "The French Model," written by Neville Fleeson and Albert Von Tilzer. Miss Ardine is a very attractive young woman who for several years was the Ardine of Bradley and Ardine. She is an exceptionally capable dancer. Mr. Fleeson and Mr. Von Tilzer have fitted her well and her associates Tyrell and Kaye lend splendid first aid.

LOWE'S THEATRE

Recent dispatches report that the wealthy New York batchelors can find absolutely nothing new under the sun. They are desperate. They have tried everything, and now some of them are reverting to hard work in their quest for novelty. It is stated that Nicholas Wentworth, despairing even of work, recently turned the key on his magnificent apartment, and went abroad again. Through a series of rather unusual circumstances, a young girl from Iowa by the name of Katherine Emmerson gained access to his apartment, posed as his wife and commenced to dress and frivol to the manner born.

She got away with the masquerade for several weeks until her innocens parents came to visit. They found her receiving homage from an impetuous youth named Dick Wayne, so they cabled her claimed husband and warned him that it was time for him to return and supervise her social activities. After the first shock was over Wentworth did come home to view the interesting and unknown lady who had masqueraded so blithely as the sharer of his joys and dollars.

What he found entirely cured his ennui, and the story of his revived interest in life will be enfolded on Loew's screen all next week when the Metro Goldwyn Mayer masterpiece, "The Slave of Fashion" will be shown. This is the picture that will set Norma Shearer one pace further in the screen gallery of fame. It is her greatest effort and besides being a fascinating story of "poverty's child," living in Gotham like a princess, it is a perfectly stunning fashion parade.

Lew Cody is the handsome young Croesus and William Haines the adoring admirer. Mary Carr and James Corigan are the bewildered parents, and Hobart Henly directed the production.

clammy bed with its icy sheets. Shivering—no more sleep. Only Father Levine's heavy breathing to break the thick silence.

There were more customers now. They came frequently and brought friends who brought more friends. Sometimes Father Levine would laughingly give away a pink-lipped bathtub of a cup or a small package of tea.

Great news! Father Levine could get a new business. Would Mother Levine listen? Yes. What was it?

"A seltzer business. It's in the basement."

"Where could we live?"

"Upstairs. Four fine rooms."

"The money?" doubtfully.

"It's a good business. The man what has it made more money in four years than we have made in ten years we was here."

"Then why don't he want it no more?"

"He must got to go back to Europe. He won't never be able to come back. He is losing if he gives it to us, but no one wants it to buy."

"Oh, well." Father Levine heard resignation in her tones. After all, why should she protest? No doubt he was right. He always was, and, besides, he knew more about it than she did. And she was so tired. Sometimes it almost hurt to think. They moved.

The city was growing. The bridges were finished. They were alive with creaking traffic by day, aglow with glaring lights at night. Heavy drays. Wagons. Commerce. Then the crashing elevated, shutting out blue heaven. Nerve-breaking.

Mother Levine saw all these things when she climbed the cellar steps. She was vaguely aware of them down in the aching void. And all this life was moving on without her.

It was wet down in the cellar. The drippings from the seltzer bottles formed damp, sickening pools in the corners of the cellar. They never seemed to dry up. They choked the air out of the place with their cloying presence. In the winter, cold wind whistled through windows which were never closed tightly, through unseen cracks in the cellar itself.

Mother Levine poured the stinging seltzer into glass bottles, screwed on the squirting metal tops, pasted on the sticky labels, arranged the filled bottles in rows. Lifting, straining, her back ached dully through the long hours. Acid, carbonated water. It was always dark. Even in summer the chill was forbidding. Would her blood ever feel warm in her veins again?

The truckmen from the jobbers' plants came to fetch the bottles. They filled the cellar with their noise, their filthy, yellow overalls. They laughed disgustingly, spat forcefully in the corners. They were careless with the bottles. Very often the compressed charged air in the water would blow off the metal caps. Cuts. Blood.

Mother Levine shuddered when she touched the raw wounds of the truckmen. Then water warmed laboriously over a flickering oil stove, lengths of bandages torn quickly from an old, cast-off petticoat. Over in a few minutes, yet a lasting memory for days. Whenever it happened she could not call for help. Father Levine was up on the top floor, taking charge of the business end. One of the four rooms served as an impromptu office. The "front room" had a shiny black hair-cloth sofa, shreddy, stained wall paper, several chairs. Curtains hung limply at the tired-looking windows. There were two bedrooms and a kitchen, a replica of the other one in colour, smell and atmosphere. Here, in his perpetual black derby hat, Father Levine cooked their meals. He would often send one of the wistful-eyed children down into the cellar with something for Mother Levine. She did not care to climb the six breath-taking flights herself. It was bad enough at night.

"No; I don't want nothing. I can't eat. Only let me stay quiet a little." She would sit there in the odorous kitchen, to the accompaniment of the splash of water on an iron sink, the clatter of tin forks and knives and plates, and the dull gabble of humanity outside the window.

Afterward. Dark rooms, only the kitchen softly aglow. The alarm clock. Tick-tock. Like a death watch or a heart beat. Mother Levine's mending basket on the table. Ancient shirts, socks, toe and heel-worn, bits of cloth, all tumbling out. Thick black and white bread, heavy, rusty scissors, years and years old. No one ever thought of buying a new pair. An old brass thimble without a head. Sew, sew, sew, endlessly. Down came the tired head on the worn table. The same posture thus, minute on minute. A deep sigh. Scattered things found and thrown together. The light dimmed. Footsteps. Patter, patter. Bed.

Then there were other nights when there was washing to do. The climb down the steps with an enormous bundle in her arms to the back yard. There were no tubs in the kitchen. A dull street lamp shed its lurid greenish-yellow glow on the housetops. Icy water. The quick plunge up to her elbows, thick, brown, odorous soap. Rub, blub, splash. Monotony. The spray flew in her eyes, stung. The damp changed her bones to brittle. The stone yard held the little eddies of water that came from the tub and formed paddles around her feet. The cold bit into her shoes. Rinse, rinse. Wringing, shaking, clasping wet ends firmly with clothespins on coarse rope that cut into her water-soaked, tender hands. The clothes were hung up. There they were, gleaming white in the darkness like smirking ghosts flapping their cold wings.

She climbed the high stairs. Black fatigue. Darkness closed in like a soft velvet cloak.

people having spent a few days in Russia, returned and demanded five million pounds for Crimean colonization. They were promised this sum without a moment's hesitation. The money will be collected and distributed in accordance with the plan announced, unless this Congress has the courage to address the leaders of American Jewry earnestly. We demand that the American leaders, before they grant five millions for colonization in Russia, Crimea or Ukraine, test the comparative advantages to be secured from the expenditures of such a sum in Russia, rather than from a similar expenditure for the reconstruction of Palestine. They must weigh and consider this matter with the utmost caution. I should be the last to wish to delay the formation of the Jewish Agency by even one day. We have a great responsibility in regard to the Agency. We must ask ourselves what our situation will be when the Agency is formed if projects such as are being supported to-day, are accepted. Edmund Burke said there must be a relationship between the price paid and the thing bought. To keep still at this Congress concerning the project for Russian colonization would be too great a price for the Agency. We must speak clearly and plainly. I am not opposed to Jewish colonization in itself, but I am a Zionist and wish to be certain that those able to carry this project through should prove its fitness and necessity before I, as an American Jew, agree to a plan which will cost more than five million pounds—a sum which might be used much more fruitfully if put at the disposal of the new Jewish settlement in Palestine.

"Perhaps this Congress will decide to be silent. I, as a Zionist, cannot be silent. I am not interested in whether my present remarks were parliamentary or not. I wish to say a word of warning as long as there is time. A great danger is bound up with the project for Crimean colonization, other dangers than those which we undertake with open eyes when we work for colonization in the land which will be ours.

"I wish to express the hope that it will not be long before the leaders and supporters of the Brandeis and the Mack group again take their place as active workers in the service of the Zionist movements and the Zionist Organization."

Palestine or Crimea?

out due and thorough consideration. After the Cleveland Convention—I wish to emphasize the word AFTER—Weismann performed a great service for Zionism. His work for the Zionist organisation and the Keren Hayesod cannot be sufficiently appraised. But he could not go to the Joint and demand five millions from their funds for work in Palestine.

"Had he made this demand, his wish would probably not have been granted even if he had pointed to the forty-year work in Palestine. But now a few
